

Legal Dimensions of Contemporary and Future Use of Force

Incorporate law into decision-making, shape the global future

Thematic cluster:

Security and Law

Course dates:

28 - 30 October 2019

Course location:

Geneva, Switzerland

The use of force in peacetime and during armed conflicts has various forms and manifestations, and the respective international law is highly complex. This course provides a comprehensive overview of the legal rules applicable to the use of force, and teaches the skills to work effectively with legal concepts and documents.

COURSE BENEFITS

The use of force is increasingly regulated by a complexity of legal instruments and norms. High-quality analysis of conflicts and effective policymaking is not feasible without mastering the respective legal landscape. Convening a variety of professions from different continents, the course promotes innovative exchange of opinions and ideas, fostering a unique global network.

The course enables you to:

- understand international law on the use of force, as well as its effects and limits
- analyse international legal processes and documents
- articulate legally sound security policy decisions
- influence the development of new international law on and related to the use of force

COURSE FOCUS:

The course introduces the main concepts of international law on the use of force, notably ius ad bellum, international humanitarian law, human rights law, and international criminal law. It examines how international law on the use of force relates to (geo-) political and practical realities, such as great power politics, armed non-state actors, and institutions of international justice. The course also studies contemporary cases of use of force, and discusses how contemporary and future legal and policy-related challenges can be addressed.

The course consists of first-class expert presentations, current case studies, and stimulating debates with experienced peers. The course equips participants with documents that support their daily work in whatever sphere they operate.
